Ford's Atheneum.—The unrivaled tragedian of this age, Mr. Edwin Forrest, made his appearance in the presence of a crowded house at Ford's Atheneum, and appeared on the character of "Richard III," in which he was supported by Mr. McCullough and Miss Weston. The audience were electrified by the wonderful powers of Mr. Forrest.

Next Monday night this great tragedian appears again, in the character of "Hamlet." The world will never cease to admire the truthful and life-like productions of that great English bard and dramatist. The secret of the great and increasing admiration which has been expressed for Shakespeare's predictions in the fact that they are so true to nature. Human nature, such as mognitude, that but here there is found a genius which will fully comprehend and delineate it.

Shakespeare was one of these, and Edna will be equally so as she has thoroughly studied the mind of the great, and has made him the object of his secret of understanding humanity, and having the genius and talent for the great task, he succeeds in rendering the sublime thoughts of the author, in all their original and emotions, after having had full time to think.

Relatives of deceased soldiers can be furnished with all the information they desire in connection with the death of their loved ones.

Our FELLOW'S HALL.—Kunkel's famous troupe continues to draw large and fashionable audiences, and no wonder! Kunkel is the best we ever had. L. Floyd and his son, Charles, take up the rôle of the well-known "mollified gals" in the country; Harry Lee is the most comical "Bridger-Bone" to be found; Seymour will "provoke a saint to smile" by his immortal fun, and Master Emerson can shake his head and shake the sides of the audience by his gags.

Circassians.—We are glad to perceive that the efforts of the enterprising proprietors of this elegant temple of amusement are well appreciated. Drop in at the Canterbury any night during the performance, and you will find the hall crowded. We had the pleasure last evening of meeting the author of the song "John Mortimer," in the "American Gothic," as she is termed, Miss Fowler. Both of them are artists of very superior talent. A fine ball is offered for to-night, and this afternoon, at 3 P.M., a grand exhibition of dancing, music and pantomime will take place. The admission price is 50 cents, and the proceeds will go to purchase elsewhere.
